PHS Awarded 16 Commended Students in the 2020 National Merit Scholarship Program

Academic excellence is always something special to celebrate and this year Parkland High School students Aishani Agrawal, Olivia Denman, Ojas Gupta, Suzanne Kozloski, Andrew Laudenslager, Coby Lindenmuth, Sophia Liu, Nishitha Mandapati, Neha Pamidi, Nathan Reimer, Meghna Sequeira, Jacob Shaffer, Emma Stolinis, Alan Uthuppan, Arjun Vedantham and Jerry Zhang have been named Commended Students in the 2020 National Merit Scholarship Program. Each of these excellent students has received a Letter of Commendation from the school and the National Merit Scholarship Corporation. They represent a select group of 34,000 Commended Students across the nation who scored among the top five percent of the more than 1.5 million students who entered the National Merit Scholarship Program. The administration, faculty, and student body congratulate these Commended Students and their parents for these outstanding accomplishments.

The school year has kicked into high gear as we near the completion of the first marking period on November 6. Report cards will be distributed on Thursday, November 21. October was a busy month highlighted by a terrific Homecoming Week (October 8-12). Student Council is very proud to announce that PHS, spearheaded by Student Council's Garter Bowl, raised $3,000 for the Parkland Caring Closets and Food Pantry. I'm also extremely proud of our various school clubs and organizations for collaborating to collect over 3,700 food items for families in need. The Garter Bowl was filled with exciting plays and a high level of competitiveness. I would like to commend all the Garter Bowl participants while issuing congratulations to the Senior girls' Garter Bowl team who won the championship game.

Our fall sports teams have enjoyed very successful seasons and district playoffs. We wish them the best as they continue to pursue their goals in District XI and State Competition.

For families, do not miss out on our theater program's production of Disney's Beauty and the Beast, Jr., with performances on November 8-10. The cast and crew can't wait to perform and I highly recommend coming out to what will be a very entertaining show.

On Monday, October 21 we held an assembly to showcase to students the dangers of vaping and the dangers of using THC while vaping. Too many teenagers today have turned to vaping as experimental practice in lieu of past generations use of cigarettes. That, combined with the heavy media influence minimizing marijuana's or THC's impact on society, has quickly escalated the use of vape pens as part of the teenage culture. Case in point, in a recent study the University of Michigan found that 20% of high school seniors are using e-cigarettes (vaping, etc). To help parents learn more about this issue, a Parent Forum will be held on Wednesday, November 13 at 6 PM in room C200.

Please note on Wednesday, November 27, Parkland High School will have a 1:00 PM early dismissal. Happy Thanksgiving!

Sincerely,

James E. Moniz II
Principal

DRIVER'S EDUCATION

WATCH FOR DEER

Autumn brings an increase in deer activity, and drivers are reminded to watch carefully for deer darting across and along roadways.

Fall marks the deer's breeding season, and deer pay less attention and become bolder as they move around more and travel greater distances seeking mates. Primarily nocturnal feeders, deer are most active between sunset and sunrise. Other factors that affect the travel patterns of deer in the fall are farmers actively harvesting the last of their crops and preparing for spring planting, increased activity in the woods from hunters seeking game and outdoor enthusiasts enjoying the last remaining days of warmer weather.

By following a few safety tips, motorists and outdoor enthusiasts can help reduce the possibility of being involved in a crash with a deer:

- Remember to slow down and use caution, particularly where deer-crossing signs are posted.
- Increase following distance between vehicles.
- Make young drivers aware of increased deer movement.
- Be especially watchful during morning and evening hours when wildlife is most active.
- Exercise caution when one deer crosses a roadway. Since deer often travel in small herds, one deer will usually be followed by others.
- Always wear your seat belt.
- Never drive impaired.
- Turn on your headlights if your wipers are on — it's the law.

If a dead deer presents an obvious safety hazard on State roadways, motorists can call 1-800-FIX-ROAD to have the deer removed.

BEHIND-THE-WHEEL PROGRAM

If your child has recently obtained their learner's permit and are interested in the Behind-the-Wheel program, register online at www.cliu.org/driversed. ## STUDENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM (SAP)

A growing number of students are stating that they have some issue with anxiety and/or depression. Many students find it difficult to continue with daily activities that they once enjoyed or tolerated. They have difficulty with school attendance, refuse to join or drop out of extracurricular activities, and spend a great deal of time on devices. Parkland High School offers a vast array of services geared to move children forward through learning a variety of coping strategies. However, many students are refusing the services both inside of school and counseling services independent of the school. Parents can find this very difficult.

HELPING RESISTANT TEENS INTO TREATMENT

It is important to get to the bottom of why kids are being resistant and try to change their minds. Here are some common reasons why a kid might say no to treatment:

- She doesn't think she needs help. She might say, "This is just how I am."
- She doesn't think therapy or medicine would work.
- She's already tried it and didn't like it.
- She thinks getting help is embarrassing.
- She's feeling defensive. Not only is this a common posture for teens, it's also an understandable reaction from someone who is tired of repeatedly struggling or getting negative attention over something.
- She's feeling hopeless. She can't imagine that it's possible for her to feel better.

Understanding the reason or reasons your child has for being resistant will help you tailor how you respond. As parents of teens know, convincing older kids to do something they don't want to do is difficult. That's because teens are growing up, which means they want — and, developmentally speaking, they need — to have more control and independence. Teens might not always be the best judge of what they need, but it's essential for parents to give them a chance to explain how they feel and then give a thoughtful response. Not only will it improve your relationship with your teen, it will also make her more likely to listen to you. Here are some strategies to try:

Frame it differently.

For reluctant patients, psychologist Jerry Bubrick sometimes compares therapy to working with a coach: "If your son is playing basketball, of course he's going to have a basketball coach. Even professional basketball players need coaches to learn new strategies, learn new skills, think about different ways to succeed. Your son can do therapy to learn these skills and practice them over and over, and eventually he won't need the coach anymore." Depending on what your teen needs help with, it might also be a good idea if the entire family came in for treatment. This is a good strategy to use when kids are getting defensive because it doesn't single your teen out as the patient — the whole family is working on this issue.

Focus on your teen's priorities.

Sometimes teens will disagree that they have a problem, or think that what they are struggling with is a part of them that can't or shouldn't be treated. When kids think that they can't get better it is sometimes a symptom of their disorder. For example when kids are depressed it affects how they think, so they might not be able to imagine feeling better. Kids can also start identifying with their disorder and even find comfort in it, so the idea of getting treatment can actually be scary. When kids don't think they have a problem or are ambivalent about what treatment can do for them, psychologist David Anderson recommends starting by asking the teen what he wants to get out of it — not what you or his teachers or anyone else wants: "We would work on getting buy-in by focusing initially on his priorities. What is he looking for at this stage? What kinds of things would he like to be able to improve, like homework or making friends? Then we can outline how the things he's motivated toward might be achieved in our work together." This is similar to a technique called motivational interviewing, which is a collaborative approach some therapists use to help kids resolve their ambivalence and find their motivation for getting better.

Find the right doctor.

It is important to find a treatment provider who is a good match for your child's personality. If she doesn't like or respect the person that she's working with, or thinks she can outsmart him, it isn't going to be a good fit. Although it's very frustrating, you may need to keep looking until you find the right person for your teen. Sometimes parents decide to come in first themselves, without their child, to meet the clinician and ask some questions (a good one is how she would approach working with a reluctant teen). Clinicians should also have good pointers on what you can be doing at home to help. If your teen has already tried getting treatment but it hasn't helped, or she didn't like the person she was working with, psychologist Stephanie Dowd recommends asking her why she thinks that is. For example, what wasn't helpful or what didn't she like about therapy? What did she like? You can keep these qualities in mind and work together to find a therapist who does more of the positive things. Many kids prefer working with clinicians who are active participants in conversations — not just passive listeners. Dr. Dowd suggests, "Find two or three therapists she can interview and tell her that she can choose the one that she feels most comfortable with, and thinks will help the most. Finding a therapist who is a good fit is extremely important, and making the choice hers will help her feel ownership over her own treatment, which is extremely important to teens and sets the stage for effective therapy."

Don't give up.

If your child says no the first time you talk about starting treatment, keep trying. Use the strategies above and try asking clinicians what they would recommend. It's also important to continue making an effort to listen to how your teen is feeling and what he thinks he needs. Important things usually aren't settled in one conversation. Progress may come gradually. "If you lay the groundwork by strengthening your connection with him now, he'll be more likely to turn to you for support when he's finally ready," says Dr. Dowd.

OTHER OPTIONS

If your teen refuses to go to counseling, don't despair. You still have several options about how to get help.

- Seek counseling on your own without your teen. Often, parent-training can be one of the most effective ways to help teens. A therapist may be able to teach you how to coach your child. If your teen knows you're going to counseling to talk about him, he might also be interested in going to share 'his side' of the story.
- Create a contract with your teen. If it's a mild issue that you're concerned about, create a contract with your teen. Tell your teen he has to go to a certain number of sessions, such as five, before he can make a decision about whether to continue treatment.
- Consider online counseling. Sometimes, teens who won't speak to someone face-to-face will consider talking to a therapist online. Online treatment isn't appropriate for every condition so it's important to talk to a therapist or your teen's physician about the potential pros and cons before you begin treatment.

Superintendent's Message
Closing or Delaying School for Inclement Weather- A Most Challenging Decision

Among my most challenging responsibilities as Superintendent of Schools is making the decision regarding school delays or cancellations. And yet, given the geographical location of our school district, inclement, wintry weather will always be a seasonal challenge.

Because it is getting to be that time of year again, I want to share a few thoughts about the process that is utilized in making inclement weather decisions in Parkland. Hopefully, this information will demystify the process and minimize the frustration associated with not knowing how decisions are made.

In much the same manner as everyone else, we learn about approaching weather conditions from television, radio and computer reports. Once the weather alert occurs, our Transportation and School Services Departments begin to make preparations.

If the weather front is occurring in the evening or overnight, Transportation will have a couple of drivers out at about 4:00 a.m. First they will check those roads that are typically most problematic. As you know, from north to south, our school district spans 75 square miles and varies greatly in road and weather conditions. At the same time, we will be speaking with the municipalities and PennDOT about plowing/cindering/salting schedules. We also speak to key personnel in surrounding school districts to ascertain any information that may be helpful.

Typically, by 5:00 a.m., we will have gathered all of the most current information that is available. This information is coupled with our knowledge of Parkland School District demographics:

- Weather conditions vary greatly across the district
- We have in excess of 1,000 bus stops
- Our buses will travel in excess of 8,000 miles during a school day
- We transport approximately 10,000 students per day
- Our buses will be operating within the typical traffic flow
- Many of our bus stops may be affected by snow plowing
- Our Grounds Department will need time to plow parking lots and clear walkways

Based upon all the data and knowledge we have about our weather conditions and demographics, I typically make a decision by 5:30 a.m. Once I make this decision regarding a delay or cancellation, I start to make the necessary contacts. The radio and television stations are notified and key personnel are called. We will also be utilizing our rapid notification system so staff and parents will receive a personal phone call, email and/or text message designated for this purpose. If your contact information has changed, please notify the school office as soon as possible. The message is also posted on our district web site at www.parklandsd.org.

On most of these occasions we will make ONE decision early in the morning- to close or delay- and that will be final for the day. We believe this is easier for most parents as you make plans for the day. Once in a great while the timing of a weather event is such that buying a little extra time with a delay MIGHT allow us to safely open school. In these rare events, the message will state that we will provide an update by a certain time. The same means of communication will be used to provide an update when necessary.

Please remember- it is the responsibility of parents / guardians to make arrangements for the care of your children in the event that we need to close or delay our schools for weather or any other potential emergency situation.

This information is being shared to provide you with some insight into what happens behind the scenes during bad weather events in Parkland. Please know that student safety is the central focus of this exercise. Entrusted with the safety of approximately 10,000 students, we will always err on the side of caution in making weather-related decisions; no decision is more important.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR COOPERATION AND UNDERSTANDING! Let's hope for a mild winter and an early spring!
